Property Description

Located between Sierpe and Drake Bay in Costa Rica's Southern Pacific region, Sarangundí is a rare 247-acre conservation property offering exceptional potential for an eco-lodge, wellness retreat, boutique hospitality project, sportfishing destination, or private jungle sanctuary near Corcovado National Park. Protected by the same family for more than 65 years, the property preserves approximately 90 hectares of primary rainforest alongside 10 hectares of open and regenerating land ideal for low-impact development. Surrounded by more than 1,000 hectares of protected forest, the property offers extraordinary privacy, immersion in nature, and long-term conservation value. The beautiful Sarangundí creek flows year-round through the property, creating a stunning natural centerpiece. Near the Sierpe River, the property features natural terraces ideal for building, with breathtaking views over the mangrove forest, river, and surrounding mountains.
